

Ralph Dalton

Vice President

Prior to Ralph Dalton's successful Wall Street banking and sales career, he was a star member of the infamous Georgetown Hoyas basketball team in the early 1980's playing for the legendary John Thompson, II. After sustaining a devastating season ending knee injury (which was studied in medical journals) in an intra-squad game prior to the start of his first season, Dalton persevered through a nine-month recovery to play alongside with his close friend Patrick Ewing including routes to the NCAA FINAL FOUR and becoming the 1984 NCAA Tournament Champions and the 1985 NCAA Tournament runner-up. In the 1985 Eastern Region Final where Ewing was in serious late foul trouble, Ralph stepped up to lead the Hoyas to victory. After graduating in the Spring of 1985, Ralph stayed on for his fourth year of varsity play and became the first basketball player ever at Georgetown University to earn an MBA. He has enjoyed a long and successful career on Wall Street in fixed income and emerging markets securities, with posts at Prudential Securities, and The Bank of New York before working in leadership positions at Merrill Lynch and Scotia Bank. From 2014 to 2018 he served as President and Chief Compliant Officer at Barclay Investments. While at Merrill Lynch, Ralph played a key role in college recruiting, mentoring, executive coaching, and employee development. Ralph will continue to perform these duties at B.E.S.T.
